1. What am I going to research?

Find general information about your topic by using "Reference Sources."

What are “Reference Sources?”

There are many different kinds of Reference Sources that provide different kinds of information (e.g. encyclopedias, almanacs, and dictionaries.)

Reference Sources are sources of information that provide an introduction to a subject area, brief factual information, definitions of unfamiliar terms, access to other relevant sources of information like books or websites, and/or a summary of issues.

Example of topic: colonial Canada

2. How do I narrow my research topic?

Create a research question.

Based on your research in #1 above, identify a specific area of this topic that you would like to learn more about.

Next, write a research question that will help you to investigate this specific topic.

My research question…

Example of research question: What attitudes permitted slavery to exist in colonial Canada?

Created by: Kristen Hearns, Learning Commons Coordinator, Upper Canada District School Board
3. What keywords can I use to help me search?

Brainstorm

Use a dictionary, a thesaurus, and/or the other “Reference Sources” above to find similar/broader/narrower words for each of the keywords in your research question.
